The Essence of Taylor

Only a series of "nows," . . . a succession of "present moments": moments of frustration, moments of exuberance, pensive moments, painful moments, moments to share and moments to face alone . . . but moments whose cumulative effect is the difference between the person I now am and the person I was a year ago . . . moments which fuse to become the essence of Taylor for me.

that truth is not a substance which a professor can pour into me, but rather a consciousness which lies within me; invaluable moments when I really learn—when I internalize or synthesize, relate or develop previously accepted concepts into new understandings; moments which are as likely to occur in the solitude of my room or in the laboratory of practical experience as in the formal classroom.

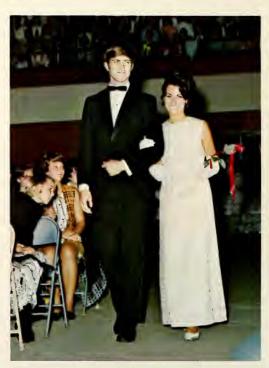

... spontaneous moments when the unlimited individuality of people becomes a treasured and stimulating awareness; "happening" moments of accidental togetherness when I see you in a new light; honest moments when you and I are free to be silent or gay or talkative or glad; shared moments when I impulsively reveal a new facet of me and am shown in return one of you.

... memorable moments, anxiously anticipated, planned long in advance; important moments for which I want to be my best self: a serene, confident, poised me, ready to enjoy the exciting "now"; infrequent moments, mentally rehearsed many times, for which I still am never quite ready enough; unusual moments when "now" is special enough to be always remembered.

Homecoming Queen, Miss Leanne Capelli

... explosive moments when I burst involuntarily into a physical expression of the seething intensity inside; refreshing moments when the steady, rhythmic pulse of pounding blood clears a stuffy mind; endless moments of tedious discipline and grueling punishment which make possible those rare triumphant moments of controlled power, endurance, and skill.

... reflective moments when I can stand quietly and look around me; moments when I can appreciate the campus world that brings us from our varied backgrounds and traditions and offers us a vantage point from which to view each other; proud moments when I assess the structural and personal change and growth of this world; moments when I am glad to identify with the traditions around me.

... restless, groping moments
when the "whys" loom larger than the "becauses";
when a long-sought answer shatters at a touch into a thousand new questions; when the tantalizing certainty that
"wholeness" exists—that I almost touched it yesterday and was even closer the day before—drives me relentlessly in the quest of it... for myself alone, for you and me together, for all of us collectively.

Taylor bestows an honorary doctorate degree on Rev. Donald Barnes.

Taylor's 1969 Commencement exercises were conducted on Sunday, June 1. Two honorary doctorate degrees were awarded to Rev. Donald Barnes and Lester C. Gerig respectively. The morning Baccalaureate speaker was Dr. Harold J. Ockenga and the Commencement valedictory address was given by Devee Boyd. As the recessional began and the new graduates marched out, a world of opportunities opened to them. Graduate school, elementary and secondary school teaching, military service, nursing and pre-med school, business vocations, seminary, and marriage await Taylor graduates.

One goal is met, others lie ahead

Summer activities involved Taylor students not only in summer school on campus but in off-campus experiences as well. Some students spent a month at Au Sable Trails in Northern Michigan studying biology and related subjects. Another activity took many able-bodied young men on one of the two Wandering Wheels bicycle trips led by Bob Davenport. Other Taylor men and women devoted the summer to Taylor's World Outreach program. TWO provided the opportunities of traveling to foreign countries to work with mission boards as well as staying in this country to work in camps and inner-city ghettos. While these students were participating in Taylorsponsored programs, others were representing Taylor in their various summer employments. Whatever the activity, students found that they could profit spiritually as well as scholastically and physically.

Placement tests keep freshmen mentally alert.

New Student Week provided freshmen and transfers an opportunity to become oriented to Taylor before the regular class schedule commenced. A myriad of activities filled every free moment. Convocations, innumerable tests, music auditions, student mixers, singspirations, and hall meetings all crowded into that first important week. Strange faces and names soon became familiar at a Hawaiian luau and Talent Show. The Christian concert presented by the "Spokesmen" gave everyone a chance to organize and direct this year's goals in the right direction before beginning the rigorous schedule of classes and freshmen initiation.

"Parting is such sweet sorrow."

Off campus and on campus at the same time? It sometimes seems that way to students who live in the apartments. To single students, apartment life provides greater independence and a greater walking distance to classes. It means trudging to the R.A. for a sweeper, paying a telephone bill, and having members of the opposite sex live next door. To married students, apartment life means living in privacy and sharing the common duties of cooking, dishwashing, and cleaning. It also includes learning to balance the household budget on a college student's salary.

The dorm becomes home for many

The Residence Hall becomes a home away from home when students move in each September to live for nine months. Each day begins with the echo of footsteps down the halls and the muffled voices of students not quite awake. The welcome surprises of a certain letter in the mail or an "A" on the Biology test are shared with empathetic friends. As each hall experiences new engagements, birthday parties, and prayer meetings a united bond of friendship is formed.

Evening activities in the Residence Hall range from quiet periods of study to all night shoot sessions. Popcorn parties, record sessions, phone calls, and serenades help to break the monotony of studying. When the din of voices increases to a loud roar, the hall counselor sometimes finds disciplinary action necessary. By one or two in the morning a pervading silence finally settles over the hall as students fall asleep whispering miscellaneous facts for tests the following day.

Taylor's 1969 Homecoming festivities began with the coronation of Queen Leanne Capelli. The "Motion With Meaning" theme was emphasized in class floats, in the band presentation, and in hall decorations. The alumni and parents thronged to the football field to watch the game end in victory for Taylor's Trojans. Climaxing the action-filled day was the evening flashback presentation of 1968-69 memories emceed by Linda Kukuk and Bill Dickson. The program was concluded with a secular concert given by the "Sands of Time."

Presented by the Speech Department and the Trojan Players, Brandon Thomas' comedy Charley's Aunt provided several evenings of refreshing entertainment in the fall. The intertwined plot and slapstick humor unraveled as Jack and Charley, college roommates, invited their girls, Kitty and Amy, to a luncheon on the condition that Charley's aunt would be present to act as chaperone. Their frustations mounted when they received the aunt's telegram announcing the delayed arrival. In desperation they placed the responsibility on their unwilling friend, Babberley, who was forced to impersonate the aunt. Through his wild escapades and ridiculous antics, the play was brought to a roaring climax.

Directed by Mrs. Gladys Greathouse and her assistants, Donna Day and Al Holmberg, Charley's Aunt presented the frivolous college life of the good old days in the midst of today's more turbulent campuses.

current forms of church liturgy and theology.

Theater 25 added a new dimension to Taylor's drama department as the second-story classroom in the Speech and Drama Building was converted into an experimental theater. The students in the play-directing class had the opportunity to direct ten one-act plays of their own choice and to present them in Theater 25. The playbill included the children's play, "Puss In Boots"; the musical fairy tale production of "The Frog Prince"; the more serious "Riders To the Sea"; and the absurd one-act, "The Dumb Waiter," among others.

Student directors experimented with theater-in-theround and with stages of different levels. They also had the opportunity for innovations in costuming, make-up, lighting, and props. Not only were more students able to actively participate in drama, but the Taylor community also benefited culturally from the greater number and variety of productions.

Students and faculty discuss campus governance at TU.

The 1969 annual Trustee-Faculty-Student Conference explored the topic "Campus Governance at Taylor University." Interaction of ideas toward workable policies was the main purpose of the four-day conference. Chapel convocations, presided over by Ray Maddox, directed the train of ideas around the theme. Work sessions and search labs broadened the spectrum of opinions as well as did the interaction panel with the Steering Committee. Informal receptions allowed for a much free exchange of thoughts and views between trustees, administration, faculty, and students.

A myriad of events fills Parent's Day

A myriad of activities crowded the 1969 Parent's Day agenda for Taylor families and friends. Tours were conducted for parents through the academic buildings and residence halls. A Volkswagon "bug race" was held between Sammy Morris and Swallow Robin. The traditional football game played in the afternoon was followed by a full evening of entertainment. Parents and students chose between two one-act plays and a concert presented by the Community Orchestra and the Taylor Chorale.

Held in both the fall and spring, Spiritual Emphasis Week seeks to invigorate and inspire both students and faculty in their Christian lives. Week-long chapel programs and evening services are devoted to the messages of the Spiritual Emphasis Week speaker.

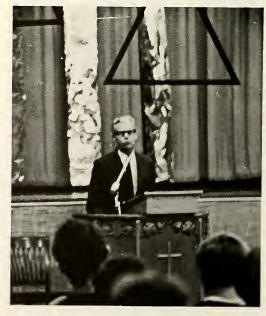

The fall speaker, Dr. Bruce W. Dunn, kept a busy schedule of counseling sessions with individuals and residence hall groups as well as regular speaking obligations. Dr. Myron Augsburger, the spring speaker, incorporated into the spiritual emphasis activities periods of dialogue with interested students. As invitations were given, many members of the Taylor community went forward to experience the abundant and spirit-filled life found in Christ.

Fall conference emphasizes missions

Sponsored by Inter-Varsity Missions Fellowship, the 1969 Missionary Conference emphasized the question of not "will" we be missionaries but rather "where." Through the theme of "Give Me This Mountain" Dr. Herbert E. Anderson and Dr. Paul E. Little challenged the Taylor community to claim the victory that God has given us over earthly obstacles. During the three-day conference, mission representatives were available to share their insights and experiences with students. Private conferences and discussions with the two speakers were also held with interested students. A singspiration and sharing time climaxed the spirit-filled conference.

Chapel exchange programs were initiated with Marion College and Wheaton College. Chapels presented by Taylor students included the Wandering Wheels, the Challengers, and the YFC staff. Faculty members also presented chapel lectures throughout the year. The student body and faculty experienced both spiritual and intellectual growth through the varied chapel programs.

Sunday Services bless Taylor community

The Taylor community gathers together every Sunday evening for a time of fellowship and spiritual blessing. Pastor Pascoe regularly ministers with a monthly series of messages, while James Danhof, Music Director, takes charge of special music and hymn-leading. Regular services are occasionally interrupted by special programs of religious emphasis.

One of the special programs during the year was the production of Menotti's operetta, Amahl and the Night Visitors, by the Music and Drama Departments. Another was the performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio by Taylor's Oratorio and the Community Orchestra. Both performances produced not only a musical experience but a spiritual one as well.

The casual atmosphere of the cafeteria was transformed into twinkling candlelight and romantic music for the Christmas and Sweetheart Banquets. Guests were ushered into a wintry forest scene decorated in snow-flocked trees with a center stage-in-the-round. Composer John Denver entertained for the evening.

The theme "Tara," taken from the movie, "Gone With the Wind," was the setting of the February Sweetheart Banquet sponsored by the Gamma Delta Chapters. Couples dined in a southern plantation surrounding as they enjoyed music by the Sands of Time.

This year several of the musical groups SUB sponsored included the Spokesmen, the Renaissance, the Deutchland Singers from Germany, Titus and Ross, and the well-known recording artists, the Vogues. Also this year, horseback riding was added to the SUB recreational facilities. Weekend ski trips and a spring break Colorado trip were also SUB-sponsored and helped to complete the social function of the Student Union Board.

The 1969-70 Artist Series broadened Taylor's cultural perspective throughout its presentation of musical artists, art shows, and dramatic productions. Through the varied repertoire of different artists, faculty and students alike learned to better appreciate the finest in classical and jazz music. Art shows by students and private painteres developed new tastes for pictorial art while literary interest in Shakespeare was expanded by the Indiana Theater Company's production of "Twelfth Night."

The catalog of musical artists presented in the Artist Series featured many eminent performers. A woodwind quintet from Ball State University and a jazz ensemble from Indiana University presented classical and contemporary music in separate concerts. Vocalists Robert Hale and Dean Wilder performed together in chapel and in an evening concert. The Series also presented the Mozart pianist and organist, Thomas Richner. The highlight of the Series came in December when Van Clibum appeared in concert before a capacity audience.

Trustees aim for interaction

The members of the Board of Trustees, headed by Dr. Lester C. Gerig, come from varied fields of business. This gives Taylor's policy-making body a broad knowledge with which to assist in making decisions.

The Trustees are interested not only in the policies of the university, but also in the feelings of the students towards these policies. During October, representatives of the board met with students and faculty members to design a code of authority that is acceptable and workable to all involved. Representatives from many areas of the school participated in these sessions on campus governance and found them beneficial.

President initiates new organization

President Rediger is the official representative of Taylor University in both professional and personal contacts, on and off campus. He spends as much time as possible with students and faculty members, and a maximum amount of time with the four administrative-area vice presidents who report directly to his office. This is his "modus operandi" for the implementation of the team leadership concept, including significant student and faculty representation.

This year, for the first time, the Administration is divided into four areas, headed by four vice presidents. Each of these persons reports directly to the President's office.

Assistant to the President, Mr. Thomas G. Beers, is beneficial in lightening the President's load and in taking over in his absence.

Mr. Ronald Keller, Director of Admissions

The Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean is Dr. Gordon Zimmerman. Working with him in this area are the Registrar, Director of Admissions, and Admissions Counselors. The primary function of this office is to retain the kind of faculty and student body who can and do relate to each other within the framework of Taylor's committment to Christian higher education.

The Dean states that this year, for the first time, Senior Capstone is an academic requirement for all graduating students. Juniors are encouraged to participate in off-campus projects in order to earn Practicum credits and experience in their major fields.

All students, at least once during their studies here, find the members of this department open for counseling and encouragement.

The primary function of the Business Affairs Department, headed by William H. Davis, is to support the educational process. Dimensionally these responsibilities extend from the classroom and residence hall to all corners of Taylor's 160-acre campus and range from daily duties of housekeeping and maintenance to long-range financial planning. While the Business Affairs area is primarily concerned about the physical needs of the student body, it also emphasizes individualized personal involvement of each member of the staff as he seeks to be sensitive to total student needs.

In addition to the service/support role, the Business Affairs area has a stewardship responsibility for the total assets of the institution.

The individuals in the Business Affairs area have responded to a call to Christian service in higher education. "We consider ourselves privileged to invest our efforts and energies in a program which will provide the Christian leadership of tomorrow," states Mr. Davis.

The Development Staff, headed by Samuel L. Delcamp, gives leadership to fund raising. The work is described in general terms as programs in current giving to keep the operational budget in balance; special gifts to make possible major advances, both program and facilities; and deferred giving to undergird the future of the University. When added up, they represent a practical approach to a practical solution, which is the effective underwriting of the University, present and future.

Taylor University needs a new library, chapelauditorium, student union, and other facilities. Mr. Delcamp states, "Our work this year in planning and development is to build bridges between these opportunities and the friends who want to see Taylor flourish and who can provide the resources to make it happen. Our work is stimulating, the outlook promising, and the responsibility awesome."

Mrs. Betty Jackson and Mrs. Jean Stout, Secretaries

Each person in the Student Affairs office is charged with the responsibility of helping individual students to interpret their reasons for being in college and helping students to participate in their education to the degree that it becomes meaningful to them. Their role is not one of the dictator or the autocrat, but individually and collectively it is the role of participant in education. Each student affairs staff member is learning along with the students and finds it a great challenge to be a part of someone else's education. The Student Affairs division assumes, along with the other university divisions, the responsibility of maintaining an effective Taylor. Its maintenance demands the right change at the right time. It demands a sensitive and flexible but firm interpretation of what Taylor stands for to those who may oppose that stand. It demands a creative foresight that will make Taylor an innovative and productive university in a day and age when traditional ruts on one hand and humanistic permissiveness on the other are all too often characteristic of the Christian community.

The area of Fine Arts includes the Music, Art, and Speech Departments. During the year significant changes have occurred within each of these departments which provided for added enrichment to the many Taylor students involved in these departments.

Within the area of Music, change was the product of additions to the professional staff. The contributions of Mr. Corlyle Drake and visiting artist, Miss Judith Coen, resulted in a stronger Music Department for Taylor. Also, the addition of the new electronic piano laboratory proved of great significance to music students.

For the Art Department, the addition of new equipment was its most significant change. A new Paragon Kiln for firing ceramics, a new Dickerson Combination Lithographic Press, other new lithographic equipment, and a new power saw and power sander enabled the department to broaden the experiences it could offer art students.

Within the Speech and Drama Department, the most important change was the creation of "Theatre 25," an experimental theatre. This was accomplished by the use of portable staging and the installation of sound and lighting equipment. The theatre offered a great deal of flexibility and was used by the play direction students to stage one act plays and religious dramas. It improved the speech and drama program by increasing the student's opportunities for practical experience in acting and directing. It also enlarged the number of plays offered to Taylor audiences for their cultural, spiritual, and intellectual enrichment. A new course entitled Introduction to the Theatre was added as a means of allowing students of all departments to get a perspective on theatre arts.

Interterm develops students' potentials

The new children's corner in the media center stimulates youngsters' curiousity.

Faculty members of the Education Department felt that the interterm was the most promising innovation of the new Taylor Calendar. The Junior Practicum and Senior Capstone, because of their flexibility, afforded education majors unlimited opportunities for involvement in actual teaching.

The department approached the Junior Practicum as a student-initiated learning experience by involving each in a school system in the United States or in a foreign country. The Senior Capstone course in elementary education took on an added innovation this year when the faculty decided that the seniors themselves should be allowed to structure the capstone course. A broad theme was selected and each individual carried it out as he felt it best met his individual needs.

The faculty found that after these interterm experiences the students returned to campus more motivated to efficiently use their time and efforts toward becoming capable teachers.

Language labs enable students to become more proficient in the languages they are studying.

The English Department's Junior Practicum trip through the South aimed for an appreciation of its role in literature. Visiting Lincoln, Mark Twain, William Faulkner, and Civil War country, the students centered their reading upon a related author or topic. The English Senior Capstone course traced the theme of "The Rise and Fall of Man" in selected works from each period of English literary history. Also, in tutorial sessions, seniors and staff discussed important works which students had not previously encountered.

The Department of Modern Languages provided its majors the opportunity to study abroad in France, Germany, or the Dominican Republic during either a summer session or a Junior Year Abroad. Through this experience, the student had an opportunity to apply what he had learned. Faculty members trust that, as a consequence, language study will become a more purposeful and academic experience in Taylor's curriculum.

Social Sciences stress involvement

Professor Groeneweg prepares his lecture in his office.

The Social Science faculty introduced several innovative ideas into its various departments.

The Psychology Department encouraged its students to gain first-hand experience through a pilot child study program conducted at Taylor's Kiddie Kampus and through work in their home states' psychological-social service agencies during the Junior Practicum.

The History Department offered juniors the opportunity to tour the South during interterm, while seniors visited Notre Dame University and points of interest in Chicago. Back on campus, use of an amplified telephone made noted specialists available in the classroom.

The Geography Department, by increasing its courses and hours, was able this year to offer social studies students a concentration of study in this area.

The Political Science and Business and Economics Departments provided for their junior students to do independent study during the Junior Practicum.

Learning by experience was emphasized by the Sociology faculty during interterm. Juniors worked in social agencies, while seniors moved into metropolitan areas to study major problems of the inner city.

Dr. Heath relates his knowledge of the ancient Biblical language, Greek.

The Philosophy faculty made extensive revisions this year. The revisions allowed for a wider selection of courses, improved courses offered previously, increased the number of hours required for a philosophy major, and added a philosophy of religion major.

The Ancient Language faculty also made notable changes. The new course, Guided Research in Hellenistic Language, offered students the chance to develop independent, significant projects in the area of Latin, Hebrew, or Greek. Also, recently acquired up-to-date pictures and cultural artifacts from Israel and Greece, reflecting current projects in studies of language, history, and archaeology gave valuable insights to the students.

The Religion faculty, offering concentration of study in Biblical literature, Christian education, or missions, found most change occurring in the Biblical literature course offered as the sophomore interterm. The aim was to get away from the typical Bible study and to offer the students a creative Bible study which emphasized discussion and student involvement.

Under the instruction of Miss Wood, the greenhouse provides learning experiences.

New facilities in the area of Natural Science aided faculty members in increasing the total effectiveness of the departments.

Particularly appreciated by the faculty in the Biology Department were not only the expanded facilities on campus, but also those at the Au Sable field station in Northern Michigan. With the availability of these facilities, the faculty was able to encourage student involvement in undergraduate research.

New equipment used by the Chemistry faculty this year included a vacuum line for use in the physical chemistry laboratory. This was used for associated measurements of chemical systems, and it aided students in gaining more meaningful experiences in chemistry.

Faculty members in the Physics Department, for the first time, were able to provide students with machine shop instruction because of the equipment which was purchased with money from a National Science Foundation grant. During interterm, juniors were given research opportunities and special projects in physics to broaden their understanding.

In the Mathematics Department, the addition of an IBM 1130 computer provided the opportunity to experiment with a computer-oriented approach to mathematics through the course, Numerical Analysis. In mathematics for elementary teachers, the department followed the "Math Lab" technique in which students teach themselves the basic concepts from a variety of experiences and assignments, using numerous manipulative aids.

In the spring term, Dr. A. J. Anglin's services were added to the Chemistry Department as assistant professor of chemistry.

Physical Education updates curriculum

The Physical Education faculty has seen many improvements come to its department this past year. These were the result of a thorough evaluation of the physical education majors and minors in order to see what they were equipped with in the area of course content upon graduation. The revisions which resulted from this evaluation took many avenues. Among these was the elimination of most two hour courses in favor of three and four hour courses. The department also found that added use of video tape equipment was beneficial. The sauna bath, another addition, proved particularly useful for the treatment of injuries. It is the general consensus of the Physical Education faculty that this updating and modernizing of the department was a healthy factor because of the fresh insights it brought.

Video tape equipment aids physical education instruction.

University services are a Taylor asset

This year, the operational service staffs of the University were increased in order to keep pace with the growing Taylor community. The services of these people may not seem to be important to some students, but without them the school would not be able to function efficiently. To remove them from the campus scene would cause many students to have to spend much of their valuable study time cooking, cleaning, repairing, and performing other miscellaneous tasks.

Another important aspect of the campus staff is the departmental secretaries. These people spend their time arranging and rearranging for the activities of the various departments.

In addition to their many secretarial duties, these people are in charge of keeping departmental supplies equal to the demands of the students and professors.

Rookies point to bright future

The Taylor football team experienced many growing pains during the 1969 season. Coached by Nelson Gould, the team ended its season with an unimpressive three and six record. However, they made excellent showings against such powerful teams as Georgetown, Blufton, and Anderson.

The teams scored impressive wins over Blufton and Manchester and was victorious over Franklin at Taylor's 1969 Homecoming. After homecoming, which was early in the season, the team was plagued with injuries in several major positions. These injuries, however, were compensated for by the help of other outstanding players. Junior Larry Dillon was an outstanding receiver of the season, scoring several touchdowns which were sparked by the quick and intelligent plays of quarterbacks David Tickner and Terry Metzger. The playing of Co-captains Joe Romine and John Bonham was also instrumental in many tight spots.

The potential of these players and many others should develop into a fine team for next year.

Quarterback David Tickner: The game of football is a constant struggle for perfection and also a struggle for your complete devotion and committment to the game.

In giving oneself completely to the game of football, I have begun to realize what it would take to devote my life with a total committment to Christ. The lessons learned from football have been the best learning experience which I have been able and will be able to put to use in the game of life. But only with Jesus Christ as my foundation can I begin and continue this great adventure.

Harriers capture fifth in Nationals

Winning seems to be the trend for the Trojan Harriers. This was ably demonstrated by the team's winning its fourth straight Hoosier College Conference Cross-Country Championship.

The team capably held its own when faced with such competition as Purdue, Ball State, and Notre Dame. The team was led by junior Ralph Foote who placed first in ten consecutive meets. Foote concluded his record-breaking season by topping the former five mile record at the Hoosier College Conference meet and by taking an outstanding first place at the NAIA Nationals at Kansas City. Foote was also given the honors as All-American.

The excellent performances of Brad Ludwick and Ray Schultz also made it possible for the Taylor University cross-country team to complete another successful year under Coach Glass.

Netmen grab fifth straight HCC title

For the fifth consecutive year, the Trojan netmen, coached by Bob Blume, captured the Hoosier College Conference Tennis Championship. With the aid of senior David Dean, the team was able to continue undefeated in all nine matches. The excellent playing of junior Gary Rickner and freshman Jim Brown also made an important contribution to this year's team, which Coach Blume feels was one of the finest teams in Taylor's history.

Dean finished his 1969 tennis career at Taylor with an impressive nine and zero mark in singles play and a seven and two mark in doubles play. Although Dean will be lost next year, Rickner, Brown, John Clarkson, and Tim Mann will be back to give the 1970 tennis team an outstanding nucleus for Coach Blume.

Taylor University's varsity basketball team, coached by Don Odle, finished one of the finest seasons it has had in recent years. The team's all inclusive 17-11 record was much better than it looked, for the Trojans ended conference play with an impressive 10-2 record, which gave the team an undisputed second place in the Hoosier College Conference.

Earlier in the season Taylor was tied with Hanover and Earlham for first place in the conference. Taylor then managed to beat Earlham twice by narrow margins in overtimes. After knocking Earlham from the competition, Taylor was tied with Hanover, both schools recording ten wins and one loss in the conference, and was faced with playing Hanover in her last conference outing. Although Taylor remained ahead for most of the game, she was not able to hold onto a small lead. Taylor then lost by three close points, giving Hanover the honor of first place in the conference, and keeping the number two spot for herself. Taylor has never been so close to an outright conference championship since 1959.

Enthusiastic students, faculty, administration, and friends fill the stands to support Taylor's basketball team.

Team members work well as unit

The ranks of the Trojan basketball team were filled with many outstanding players during the 1969-70 season. The team was capable of playing as a unit rather than having individual competition dominate, which is common with many teams.

Senior Roger Schnepp was the most impressive player of the season. Schnepp scored many times in double figures while in most cases he was the high-score man for the game. Schnepp was tough on the boards with a dead eye for the basket. Defensively and offensively, Schnepp was the team's most valuable player. Schnepp was backed by juniors Gary Rickner and Steve Reash. Rickner and Reash were both excellent ball handlers and could also "shoot the eyes out of the basket." On offensive plays, Reash was responsible for some of the most outstanding maneuvers that Taylor has seen in recent years. Many times he was able to penetrate the tough defensive walls of the opponents.

Jim Wallis and Dave Reeves made the team complete by giving it the height necessary for moving under the boards. The shooting capability of Jim Wallis gave the Trojans many added points while Reeves' powerful board action gave Taylor the all-important rebounds.

The 1970 junior varsity basketball team was equipped with many new faces. Coached by Bob Blume, the team finished its season with a 6-10 mark.

Tim Rietdorf, pivot man for the team, was strong on defensive play and shot well on offense. Jim Brown, Cal Robertson, and Terry Metzger were other outstanding players for the season, adding depth to round out the Trojan nucleus.

For the first time in many years, the Trojan grapplers, coached by Tom Jarman, were undefeated in seasonal play. The team scored high in every match while holding its opponents to 15 points at the most.

The Taylor matmen showed much strength in their match with defending Hoosier College Conference champions, Indiana Central. Taylor also made an outstanding showing against Wayne State of Detroit who had held Taylor scoreless in the 1969 season.

The team finished its season by placing second in the HCC championship match. The team's high-point man was junior Phil Arnold, while Mike Gaydosh was undefeated throughout the season. Other Trojans holding impressive records were Kerry Cole, Mel Leaman, Dana Sorensen, Dave Sorensen, and Steve Dicks. Because most of these will return next year, the team has every right to look forward to another outstanding season.

For the first time in her history, Taylor hosted the HCC meet. Competition was keen as men from the other conference schools appeared to protect their records. This, however, did not keep Taylor from winning with an impressive 84 points—32 points ahead of second place Earlham.

Taylor also made an excellent showing at the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics District 21 meet and at the NAIA National meet. Seven Taylor men were selected to be on the NAIA District All-Star team while Phil Captain was honored by being selected to the NAIA National team for the second straight year. Captain captured a first place in the Nationals by winning the 3,000 meter steeplechase with a record-breaking 9:34.1, which gave him his second year for All-American honors.

After a rousing home season, the Taylor baseball team, coached by Jack King, brought home many honors along with an excellent record. Trojan Randy Mohler was selected as a 4th round draft choice by the San Francisco Giants. In addition, Mohler was selected as a first team All-American and was given an All-American rating by a major sports magazine. Dwight Johnson and Jack Vanyperin were also outstanding, given honorable-mention All-American ratings.

The team finished fifth nationally and finished eleventh nationally in batting with an outstanding average of .308. Coach King was also chosen as NAIA District twenty-one coach of the year, giving the Taylor diamondmen a fantastic season.

The 1969 golf team, coached by Don Odle, experienced great changes this year. Although the year started out quite slow, they were able to finish the season with an impressive four wins and six losses and a 5th place standing in the Hoosier College Conference match.

Composed of mostly freshmen, the team developed much momentum during the season as the team members improved their styles and golfing skills.

During its annual spring tour of Florida, the team was plagued by rain; consequently, only two of the scheduled matches were played, both of which were lost by only small margins. Upon returning home, the team actively engaged in conference play, impressing upon their opponents their enthusiasm and determination.

Field hockey is popular girls' sport

In a contest with Ball State, Lee Jones pursues a loose ball while Linda Holdcroft is ready to assist.

The girls' field hockey team consisted of approximately thirty determined girls. They played hard at this sport which requires much endurance and a quick mind. The playing field is about the size of a football field, therefore adding the requirement of a swift foot. Field hockey was the most popular girls' sport on campus this year.

The girls' basketball team, coached by Miss Knox, has become quite popular with Taylor girls. This year, girls basketball entered a new dimension at Taylor and at other institutions. The team now consists of five players covering the full court rather than the former seven half-court players. Since a girl is now allowed to dribble clear down court instead of only two dribbles, the skill and coordination involved are more important, giving the girls a chance to compete on the same level as their male counterparts. These new rules greatly increased competition and helped create exciting new dimensions in Trojane basketball.

Volleyball has entered the ranks of women's athletics around the world. The Trojanes are now in the process of building a strong team at Taylor.

Skill, accuracy, and a quick mind are important prerequisites for the members of the Trojane Volleyball team. The team, coached by Miss Austin, is composed of nine choice players. The girls in this sport must be in top physical condition to endure the strain of a tiring match. Conditioning is of utmost importance when the play demands a tight spike or a low knee-burning dig.

WRA encourages women to compete

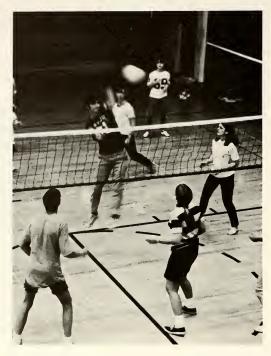

Taylor's Women's Recreation Association gives the Taylor girls a chance to informally compete in basketball, badminton, volleyball, and baseball.

This program makes it possible for any girl to participate without requiring a special skill. Physical education majors gain a special benefit by being given a chance to exercise their skills in refereeing.

The structure of the program was expanded this year to include the regular physical education classes by organizing tournament playoffs between the different classes. These playoffs gave the girls a sense of achievement that seemingly only the men have previously been entitled to.

Strong intramural spirit creates excellent teams and exciting games for Taylor men.

When the study habits become sparce and the dating situation is at a standstill, the Taylor outlook becomes seemingly dull. However, due to the efforts of the Taylor Physical Education Department there is a program provided for escape. This is the men's intramurals program.

Intramurals at Taylor consist of a variety of activities. In the fall football is provided. In the winter and spring there is basketball, track, baseball, and volleyball.

Each floor of each men's residence hall, the commuters and the shack guys are represented by at least one if not more teams. In the final weeks of each activity there are playoffs to pick the campus champions. In all, the intramurals program provides competition and excitement which are much needed after a hard day of classes and studying.

Organizations

... smaller, intimate groups where everyone may grow close in sharing and fellowship; larger, broad groups where everyone may grow wise in sharing and experience; solid, orthodox groups where everyone may grow strong in sharing and faith; daring, curious groups where everyone may grow excited in sharing and experimenting; committed, dedicated groups where everyone may grow interested in sharing and service; informal, social groups where everyone may grow happy in sharing and relaxation; many, varied opportunities so that everyone may have part in any group.

Structured after the federal government format, the Student Government Organization is comprised of the executive council, the senate, and the student court. Headed by SGO President Hal Habecker, the executive council is the policy establishing body which initiates, guides, and directs internal and external programs of student government.

As the legislative branch, the senate handles financial policy and gives official support and direction to the executive council through contact with the student body. Presided over by SGO Vice-President Rich Myers, the senate debates various resolutions. Some of these which were passed this year included a tutoring program in the Eastbrook elementary and high schools, a dress regulation change for exam week, and a used textbook sale for second semester classes.

The student court is elected by the students to serve as a disciplinary body. Its responsibility is to propose recommendations to student affairs concerning all cases of disciplinary action.

SUB brings variety of entertainment

Serving Taylor University students was the purpose behind the Student Union Board as they planned various activities. The first week found them busily involved in the schedule of new student week. SUB brought a variety of entertainment during weekends. It ranged from films such as "The Torn Curtain" and "War and Peace," John Denver for the Christmas Banquet, The Vogues and The Renaissance groups for concerts, the Colorado trip, and the hut, to the Taylor lake and horses, canoe outings, and camping and skiing. SUB co-sponsored Taylor's radio station and tutorial program and organized the Taylor Bowl. They also provided transportation for students who needed rides to and from the airport and to away games. Approximately 175 students worked on different committees to help SUB plan these activities.

The Interclass Council, which is composed of the president, vice president and one representative from each class, worked together in planning this year's freshman initiation, Matriculation Day, and the spring Taylathon. The committee also initiated all other interclass competition in basketball, volleyball and coed games.

The Resident Assistants from Swallow-Robin and the Fairlane apartments faced new responsibilities as they served in this capacity. Their duties covered stocking supplies, taking part in hall government, enforcing rules, and administering fines when rules were violated. Their job carried extra responsibilities beyond other RA's, since they were without head residents to give them suggestions or guidance in decisions that needed to be made.

The most important function of the hall counselors was to be an effective link between the different attitudes of students and of their head resident advisors. As a branch of Student Affairs, they helped in relating to students the changes and the reasons behind administration decisions. Before assuming their role as hall counselors, these students were required to take the Student Development Seminar class which better prepared them for the responsibilities they would face during the year. The planning and organizing of the activities of Homecoming weekend were undertaken by a six-member steering committee early in the fall. The committee chose the phrase, "Motion With Meaning," as this year's Homecoming theme. With the theme in mind, regulations for the many floats and displays were distributed, as well as criteria for judging them. The elections for the Homecoming court were also guided by this committee.

In preparation for the traditional coronation ceremony, the typical arrangements were needed to provide for entertainment, emcees, program content, and Homecoming court rehearsals. However, unusually careful planning was necessary for the stage decorations, since the last Spiritual Emphasis Week service immediately preceded the coronation.

Conference theme affirms peace

This year's Youth Conference Cabinet was rewarded by a full and successful Youth Conference weekend. Its success was earned by months of hard work and many faithful prayers.

A theme had to be chosen before the Cabinet could direct its plans more specifically. The desire to reach the conferees with an effective and relevant theme was accomplished through the selection of this year's theme, "Peace Through Revolution." Speakers, who related the theme, were Rev. Tom Skinner, Negro evangelist in New York and one-time member of a Harlem gang, and Dr. Richard Halverson, President of World Vision.

The Cabinet members, under the leadership of Bill Salsbery and Diane Mandt, were delegated various responsibilities which involved time and efficient organization. Publicity brochures were printed and 10,000 registration blanks were mailed. The backdrop and letterhead were designed. Other cabinet members were responsible for obtaining discussion group leaders from the Taylor student body. A coordinate sponsor program was also provided, with Miss Ruth Ann Breuninger as speaker for the youth directors and sponsors of the conferees. Dining room hosts and hostesses also had to be assigned for each dining table. Altar counselors were chosen and given brief training. The music co-chairmen planned the special music for the conference.

The Cabinet found their sponsors, Miss Jane Vanzant and Mr. Robert Boyd, always willing to lend encouragement. Their mature guidance and experience was valued and admired by the Cabinet members.

Students relate to the community

Desiring to share their faith in Jesus Christ, many students were involved in Personal Evangelism or Gospel Teams.

An interest in children encouraged student involvement in Personal Evangelism. Students planned weekly Good News Club meetings which included songs, memory verse study, and Bible stories. Other students visited children's homes and showed Christ's love as they spent time talking, playing, and witnessing.

Through music, testimonies, and slides, Gospel Teams were able to communicate their experiences of the Christian life in churches, youth groups and camps. Often these assignments included a night or an entire weekend in a nearby state as students related what Christ means to them.

Three organizations have helped provide for the spiritual growth and development of the individual.

Members of Inter-Varsity Missionary Fellowship worked hard and long preparing for the annual Missionary Conference, November 12-14. During the year members had opportunities to share their faith in Christ while visiting Ball State University and Purdue University.

A fall weekend retreat for Methodist Student Movement was a successful beginning for developing new friendships as well as challenging members spiritually. The group was active the entire year organizing other social and service projects. The club presented a program at a nursing home, had charge of a morning worship service at the Upland Methodist Church, and sponsored a taffy pull.

Kerygma Club helped prepare religion majors and minors for their future vocations. Members conducted a workshop on November 22 for churches and individuals of the community in order to demonstrate the use of visual-aid equipment. The club also invited a group of Christian businessmen who spoke to students on practical Christian living.

Gamma Delta Beta's activities were designed to aid each girl in discovering aspects of herself, her community, and her God. The year started with a "Freshman Tea" that was planned to acquaint the prospective members with the society. All the members participated in some service projects such as preparing Thanksgiving food baskets or presenting programs in the Veteran's Hospital. Gamma Delts were also responsible for planning the annual Sweetheart Banquet in February. The society has helped to teach each girl the importance of Christian love and concern for those around her.

Athletic clubs trigger school spirit

Athletic clubs unite those students who have an interest in physical education and recreation.

Pemm Club's physical education majors and minors enthusiastically participated in many activities this year. Such activities included a 25-mile bike hike in the fall and the annual spring Taylathon, which gave members many opportunities to get to know other physical education majors. Special speakers such as Dr. Pipperd, of the Indiana AAPHER and Sargent Meeks of the Drug Division of the Fort Wayne Police Dept., broadened the members' knowledge of their major field. Another highlight of the year was the AAPHER state convention held in Fort Wayne on December 5, 6, 7.

T-Club, a service organization for male athletes, assisted this year in improving athletic conditions on our campus and in the community, as well as providing a club where Christian athletes could fellowship. Only after successfully surviving the rigorous initiation could pledgees become members of T-Club.

SEA helps mold future teachers

Secondary and elementary education majors gained a broader outlook this year on the teaching profession through membership in the Student Education Association. Membership in the local SEA carries with it an automatic membership in the regional and state SEA's; therefore, Taylor members were able to attend several regional and state meetings at which they came into contact with many different philosophies and methods of teaching. One such occasion occured on November 18, when Taylor hosted a Region II meeting for ten universities.

A typically meaningful SEA meeting this year featured a variety of teachers from nearby schools who shared some of their teaching experiences. Another meaningful activity featured the Look Teacher of the Year, Miss Barbara Goldman, who not only spoke at chapel but also spent a day visiting in several education classes. Members felt that these meetings were informative and beneficial in helping them to form their own values, philosophies, and goals as teachers.

President Richard Nixon congratulates the 1969 Look Teacher of the Year, Miss Barbara Goldman, who later visited Taylor through sponsorship of SEA.

Clubs broaden interest in major field

Several clubs provide an opportunity for students to become more involved in their major fields, to inform them of recent changes, and to give them knowledge of job opportunities.

The Science Club and pre-med students in Alpha-Pi-Iota structured activities this year to promote interest in the various fields of science and math. The Science Club visited The Stritch School of Medicine of Loyola University in Chicago and saw films such as the Apollo 11 moon shot in order to advise members of the future that science holds for them.

Soc-Psy-Ety Club is primarily a service organization for sociology and psychology majors and minors. Their main service project included work with patients in the Veteran's Hospital in Marion, which enabled students to have practical experience in their field.

Students speak in foreign languages

Many students are interested in learning more about languages and cultures in other countries. Spanish, French, and German Clubs all provide opportunities for members to use the languages outside the classroom. Members of the French Club attended a French play, Antigone, at Manchester College. Spanish Club members were hosts to students from nearby colleges and high schools for the presentation of a Spanish movie once each semester. Since German Club is a new club this year, one of the highlights for the club was the ratification of a constitution.

A group of about 20 foreign students have formed a new club, The International Club. Members began the year with a meeting at Dr. Ewbank's home where they were able to share with each other their cultural and individual differences.

Students project political feelings

State elections generated enthusiasm among Young Republicans club members. The organization afforded students the opportunity to work with other colleges on conventions and to donate hours of work on the local and state levels. In addition to the campaign work during the year, the organization invited a number of speakers to its meetings in order to become well versed on current issues and political procedures.

The beliefs of Pax, a club newly formed this year, are expresssed in its Latin title, which is translated "peace." Weekly meetings were planned to bring new ideas to the campus and to stimulate thought concerning the political and social worlds. Some of the activities sponsered by Pax included such speakers as the Rev. Carl Landis who spoke on non-violence; and the Rev. J. C. Williams who spoke during a chapel convocation concerning black man's patience, anger, and pride. Members also sponsered an observance of Moratorium Day on October 15 which concluded with a debate between Professors Oakley and Loy on the subject of Vietnam.

English Symposium is a literary club composed mainly of English majors and minors. Members met monthly at Dr. Ewbank's home to discuss various poems, short stories, and novels such as; Alice in Wonderland, Till We Have Face, and Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Debate Club met each week to practice for future tournaments. Members were selected on the basis of interest, past experience, and the ability to participate in intercollegiate debating. Taylor's Debate team attended approximately one tournament each month, debating current national topics.

Echo's goal: Total campus coverage

Jay Hooper, circulation manager, gets a sneak preview of the next Echo from Pepper Dylhoff, assistant editor.

Many full hours of planning, arranging, writing, and typing were donated by Echo staff members each week to make Taylor's newspaper available to students and other interested people. Both the first-semester editor, Cindy Hockett, and the second-semester editor, Jack Crabtree, worked closely with their staffs to publish well-balanced and edited papers.

Various advancements were made this year by the Echo staffs. A new nameplate was chosen for the Echo's head. Also, special-interest issues were printed for Homecoming, Parents' Day, Youth Conference, and graduation. Other advancements included the use of several picture essays and two interterm issues edited by Pepper Dylhoff.

Most Echo readers are unaware of the time and exchange of ideas which go into the publishing of each Echo. A week of concentrated work must be spent to successfully plan its content. Copy starts to arrive at the beginning of the week, which includes varied columns and editorials on world as well as campus views. This creates work for the typists. Headlines must then be written, pictures taken, and layouts decided before the Echo is delivered to the printer on Thursday morning.

'70 Ilium blends copy, layout, photos

Plans for the 1970 Ilium were begun last May by coeditors Tom Malcolm and Kay Davis when they began selecting their staff and formulating general ideas. In the fall then, the yearbook theme, "The Essence of Taylor," was chosen and specific plans began to form.

The copy writers tried to accurately express "the essence of Taylor" by collecting their ideas directly from informed administration, faculty, and students, in order to assure accuracy of the final copy. Throughout the book, the theme stressed broader coverage of student life and activities, depicted as informally as possible.

A switch to pictorial advertising so enhanced the sale of ads that the advertising section was greatly expanded. This allowed for the purchase of eight additional pages which, in turn, permitted the addition of a closing section as well as a listing of each senior's college activities.

In production of the Ilium, staff members confronted numerous learning experiences. The most important of these is the knowledge each staff member gained of himself as he approached the challenges of creative thinking, of patience in the performance of boring or uneasy tasks, and of understanding in coping with circumstances which did not always go as planned.

Several Taylor organizations are formed for the express purpose of meeting campus communications needs.

A volunteer staff worked to compile the needed photos and information for this year's Who's New Student Directory.

Alpha Phi Gamma is a national journalism honorary which extended membership to students who have worked on the yearbook or the newspaper for at least two semesters.

Other students are involved in Parnassus, a critical literary club which prepared the annual Parnassus magazine.

In its first year, Amateur Radio Club has brought interested students together and has aided in the development of Taylor's own radio station. Already the club has built a station, made a student file for radio messages, and set specific future goals for the increase of equipment and for the understanding of radio procedures.

Fine Arts stress student creativity

Through the Trojan Players, opportunities were made available for members to participate in various facets of drama. Members derived first-hand experience in lighting, performing scenery, costumes, makeup, and directing. Speech and drama students also participated in the Atic Readers and Theatre 25, which supplemented the major productions of the Trojan Players.

The Music Club exposed majors and minors to new methods and current changes in their chosen field. The club's activities included a reception at the President's home following the Van Cliburn concert and the attending of other concerts at Ft. Wayne and Indianapolis.

An interest in art is all that is required to be a member of the Art Club. A field trip to Chicago to view the Rembrandt exhibit was the highlight of the club's activities this year.

The Taylor Marching Band assumes its position on the field.

Marching band

The band's long hours of practicing are rewarded in the precision and accurate time of their formations.

The Marching Band had a unique season. They opened it with the honor of hosting and performing at the Indiana Bandmasters' Marching Clinic in September. Then at each home football game, the band, directed by Mr. Robert Boyd, played a number of selections for the half-time ceremonies. The season was also unique in a different way. Their first performance at the Indiana Bandmasters' Clinic was hindered by rain and their final performance for the last home football game was snowed out.

As half time approaches, the band leaves to prepare for its performance.

Many long tiring hours of practice were required from each marching band member.

Practice is rewarded in concert

The Taylor Orchestra has community and students as members. Their performances included a Parent's Day concert and playing for the Christmas Oratorio and the Brahm's Requiem. The Symphony Orchestra was directed by Mr. Klaas Kuiper. The Concert Band performed in chapel, Youth Conference, and in one other concert each semester. During basketball season the pep band increased spirit with its traditional "Sweet Georgia Brown" and halftime music. The band also presented concerts on a tour through Detroit in February, and on a tour in April through Indiana, Kentucky and Ohio. Plans were started by director Mr. Robert Boyd for a South American tour in the summer of 1971.

Daily rehearsals are part of the Chorale's busy schedule.

An increase in voices gave the 53 member Taylor Chorale additional strength as they performed in chapel and for the Parent's Day concert. Not only has the chorale enlarged in number, but its percentage of music majors and minors has grown also. Most of the Chorale's hours of practicing went into the program for its trip West during spring break tour. Plans for a summer trip to Europe were also started. Dr. Philip Kroeker was the new director for the Chorale.

The larger 160-175 member Taylor Oratorio presented a performance at the end of each semester. First semester the members diligently practiced for the December performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. This Oratorio was directed by department chairman, Dr. Edward Hermanson. They concentrated second semester on Brahm's Requiem for their performance in April.

to understand

... people who need so desperately they cry only silence; war fought so bitterly men combat only officialdom; people who hunger so emptily they want only completeness; peace sought so selfishly conflict only remains; people who live so wretchedly they only exist; knowledge pursued so relentlessly facts only matter; people who care so much others really count.

... people moving from passively absorbing facts to practically applying faith; people vociferously declaring serious personal convictions; people replying with love or hate to curious or concerned questions; people seeing or ignoring facts of universal personhood; people calmly accepting negations of others' existence, refusing to live positively themselves; people growing in Christ to care that people are dying—and living.

1970 Ilium Staff

A special thanks to . . .

Mrs. Marilyn Walker, our able editorial advisor, who couldn't have made herself any more available and helpful

Mr. Roger Jenkinson, our business advisor, who efficiently handled all the Ilium finances and approved our numerous requests for "extras" . . .

Mr. Larry Glaze, our Paragon representative, who helped us get this 1970 yearbook to you . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Norm Cook, our photographer and his wife, who didn't know how to say "no"—much to our frequent relief . . .

Mr. Wilbur Cleveland, Taylor's campus editor, who was remarkably adept at providing us with pictures of events that we had lamented not sending a photographer to cover . . .

Mr. Jules Walker, a good friend, who gallantly did a lot of our sports photography and film development in spite of his crowded schedule...

Mr. Bill Stookey, a photographer, who did some excellent color photography for us as well as emergency darkroom work . . .

Mr. Frank Woschitz, an interested consultant, who gave us valuable encouragement and advice . . .

Our many administrators, professors, staff members, and student friends who generously agreed to our endless requests—which were not by any means always reasonable . . .

The patient TU telephone operators whose time we often found necessary to monopolize.
